

Greetings:

If the Sinclair Broadcasting decision to air an anti-Kerry documentary shortly before the election is an example of "serving the public interest", then we need a new definition of the term. This, to me is a clear violation of the public trust, and a review of the company's license to broadcast should be conducted by your department.

If this documentary is broadcast, then the affected stations must be given the option of showing another point of view as well, by means of local interview programs or some other form of "equal time". I fear for the future of our nation if we are only fed news according to the agenda of the corporations owning the stations. This is happening far too often already, and will ultimately prove detrimental to our democracy.

Thank you for your attention to this matter.

Sincerely,
Arlene M. Snyder
